PEER REVIEW POLICY

INTRODUCTION

Peer review is the critical assessment of manuscripts submitted to journals by experts who are usually not part of the editorial staff. Unbiased, independent, critical assessment is an intrinsic part of all scholarly work, including scientific research, peer review is an important extension of the scientific process.

1. Peer Review Process

All submissions to Critical Care and Resuscitation Journal are first reviewed for completeness and only then sent to be assessed by an Editor who will decide whether they are suitable for peer review.

The CCR Journal uses the single blind peer review process where the reviewer can identify the author, however the author is not aware of the identity of the reviewer.

Where an Editor is on the author list or has any other competing interest regarding a specific manuscript, another member of the Editorial Board will be assigned to oversee peer review.

The Critical Care and Resuscitation Journal is under no obligation to send submitted manuscripts for review, and under no obligation to follow reviewer recommendations, favourable or negative. The Editor-in-Chief of the journal is ultimately responsible for the selection of all its content, and editorial decisions may be informed by issues unrelated to the quality of a manuscript, such as suitability for the journal and priority and availability of space. The Editor-in-Chief can reject any article at any time before publication, including after acceptance if concerns arise about the integrity of the work. A concern raised by a single peer reviewer or the Editors themselves may result in the manuscript being rejected.

Authors will receive a peer review report with the editorial decision on their manuscript. All reviews are strictly confidential, and all copies of manuscripts not selected for inclusion in the Journal will be destroyed on completion of the peer review process.
